Building commissioning has its roots in the Quality Control programs of the 1970s and is a direct product of the Total Quality Management programs of the 1980s. Direct Response Commissioning is a direct response to building Owners, who complain that their facilities do not meet performance expectations. Commissioning is systematic. It includes testing all items in all modes of operation. Equipment is first inspected while it is turned off to make sure that it is installed fully and correctly.
